Use of photos

Photos will be used to promote the project and in the exhibition. This may be in print, on the internet or on social media. These photographs are submitted by you in a voluntary capacity and no payment changes hands.

Storage of photos

Photos will be stored on a secure hard drive. They will be shared with those responsible for the project through various means (email or online file sharing facilities).

Your photos will be assigned a serial number and your name or alias will not be a part of the file names or assigned to any image.

After this, the photos will be kept by More to me than HIV for longer term storage and archiving, until the project closes, or five years, whichever is sooner.

Privacy

More to me than HIV will not identify you in the photos that you give permission for us to use. However, we may ask you to provide us with a paragraph about yourself which we would like to use in the physical exhibition in the library. Your story may be used to inspire others and break down stigma related to HIV.

A digital copy of this signed permission form will be kept with the photos at all times. As the subject of the photos, you have the right to change your permission to have your photo used in the project.

If you decide that you wish to remove your permission, More to me than HIV will delete your photos securely so they cannot be retrieved after erasure. If photos have already been used for publicity, they are already in the public domain and can no longer be removed.

More to me than HIV will take all steps to ensure these images are used solely for the purposes they are intended. If you become aware that these images are being used inappropriately, you should inform More to me than HIV immediately.
